QUALITY OF EDUCATION

The Diploma of Business Marketing with a specialisation in Sports Marketing is designed to get our graduates jobs when they leave us. The practical subjects taught in this course will set you on the path to looking after players and teams, managing sporting venues or running events. We also teach our students how to plan for a career in the sports industry that will last their whole life.

KEY SUBJECTS

Students will learn about human resources, business law, marketing, the role of sports and recreation in daily life, and managing all the different people they'll come across in their career: players, sponsors, coaches, officials and the media. As well as receiving a solid grounding in all aspects of sports marketing, the course also covers the various roles within the industry including player management, event management, marketing and promotion, club and team administration, broadcasting, merchandising, and study the core elements involved in these areas.

In order to better prepare students for moving into the workplace, a key element of the unit is helping them to understand theory from a practical perspective. This is done through continual activities where students are involved in compiling marketing plans based on their in-class training and their own ideas.

This will include the development of a sports-based industry project, as well as undergoing essential work experience in a sports-specific workplace to understand the day to day activities within a sporting organisation or company.

PRACTICAL FOCUS

You'll also receive specific knowledge and practical skills related to the on- and off-field challenges specific to athletes and sporting teams, securing and maintaining sponsorship, developing media relations, and running press conferences. Students also undertake a major Business Enterprise Project, which is a group project that is guided by a mentor during trimesters two and three.

Students plan and execute a business idea that aims to deliver a profit to shareholders, and value to customers, while building effective working relationships with team members.
